

operation growing right inside eastern Kentucky forest canyons.

If you haven't seen the Salata Center, you'll be pleased to know they have live animal displays with elk, white-tailed deer, brown, and even bobcats. School groups probably think the bobcats are really cool, but we all know the native plant program is the most important part of the operation.

At the November board meeting we talked about our membership roll, which currently shows 1,100 members of STNP. Maybe it's a good thing you aren't all there, after all. Keeping up with the membership status of 1,100 people is no easy task, even with a computerized database.

We decided to send out a dues notice to all members with the exception of life members. The list of the members who aren't other members include Joyce Bonds, Yvonne Mullins, Patricia Brown, Bill White, Jim Carroll, and Mary-Louise Cooper.

At the November board meeting we also created an Editorial Committee for our newsletter.

Don Jones will be the chairman, and Doug Rubin, Beth Lathrop, Ray Smith, and Don White will be committee members. The purpose of the committee is to build a network of regular contributors who will supply articles and columns on news, issues, and outings pertaining to native plants.

We encourage anyone with something to contribute to contact one of the committee members, and we look forward to reading issues of The Lady Slipper.
